The figure representing the total amount of contributions is misleading. Looking at the figures, you would think that more cash was received than spent. That is not the case. In order to know the difference between cash received and cash spent, you must first deduct the "in kind" contributions from the total, as they were not cash contributions, and are in no way included in the expenditure section because they were not expenses.

When you do this, you will see that there is a deficit in the amount of $4820.47. This is the total amount of money contributed by me. There is no money left, it was all spent.

Also, the figure to the Secretary of State in the amount of $1100.00 was the figure they required as a deposit in order to conduct the recount. It is my understanding that the actual figure will be less than that. Whatever the actual cost, less the amount originally remitted, will be returned to the person who contributed the total amount.

I have done everything I could to tie up this last loose end before filing, but I am still awaiting the final cost from the Elections Division.
